

Face to Face With Russia (Classic Reprint)

Philip E. Mosely 2. ALLIES AND RIVALS Young Bill Robertson of Los Angeles, lightly disguised as Second Lieutenant William D. Robertson, had never been in the area before. Strictly speaking he wasn't supposed to be there now. Neither were the three privates and the jeep that made up the rest of his patrol. Somehow or other perhaps through lack of road signs or perhaps through excess of adventuresome curiosity they had gotten beyond the six-mile limit of their patrol area. Not far, of course. They were only some twenty miles beyond where they should have stopped. But at such an exciting moment who could quibble over a slight miscalculation? It was April 25, 1945, and spearheads of the advancing American and Russian armies were only 25 miles apart. Inevitably contact would be made, Germany would be split in two, and the fate of Hitler's crumbling empire sealed in a handclasp between East and West. At about 4:45 that afternoon the official handclasp took place. Crawling out on a half-wrecked bridge across the Elbe, Bill Robertson grasped the hand of a Soviet soldier and yelled Tovarisch, tovarisch! Private Nicolai Ivanovich Andreev of the 58th Guards Division returned the grip of friendship and bellowed Hello, hello! These two soldiers and their companions may have known only a word or two of each other's (Typographical errors above are due to OCR software and do not occur in the book.)
