Not illustrated. 1851 Excerpt: ... not the Lord Russell, who was this forenoon beheaded in Lincolns Inne Feilds, and made no speech at all, but delivered a written paper to Mr. Shireff North, as his last words; with which he came to the King immediatly after the execution. And his Majestie was highly displeas'd with it, being rather a surly lybell than any thing like to an engenuous and Christian confession of his black crimes: which shoves that he was resolv'd to die as he liv'd, a most undutifull and disloyall subject; but he has now gott some parte of his punishment: which I wish may speedily overtake all the Kings and Dukes enemies, who will not heartily repent ther former treasonable designes and practises, and ever continue loyall and dutifull to his Majestie and his Royall Highnes. Wee are told that the King and the whole Court will, in few dayes, returne to Windsor; and that Prince George (who truly deserves te be, as he is, highly esteem'd here) will soon thereafter be married to the Lady Anne. CXXVI.--From Charles, Earl of Middleton. Lon., July the 21st, 83. My Lord,--Tho I have nothing to communicate to you of any busnesse, yet I would not be too long without renewing the assurances of my most reall service to you. All honest men are mightily pleas'd with the happy successe of the Justice Aires, which is entirely to be attributed to your Lordships prudence; and I have not been wanting to give the praise to whom it is due. The Common Councill of London have agreed to submitt to his Majesties will, and I need not tell you of what importance it is to the security and greatnesse of the Crown. By this means they have sav'd their common good, which, upon the forfaulture, would, by law, have reverted to the heirs of the donors.
