Not illustrated. 1913 Excerpt: ...ordinary society pleasantries, the question is common: where is the woman who is at the bottom of the mischief? I think that wise people now ask an opposite question. When we meet with a man who is without fear and without reproach, whose blameless life seems to have gone on from strength to strength, upbuilding the community, and honoring humanity by his own noble image and conduct, we are apt to ask where the woman is? And our thoughts go back to the helpless cradle in which his infancy was tended, even further, to the heart to which his own was the nearest thing on earth, to the breast from which he was fed with the essence of a pure life. Happy is the man whose mother has been a tower of strength to herself and her family! The first precious lessons it has been hers to give. No matter what storms may have raged without, how mean the market or how wild the street, he has first seen the light in an atmosphere of celestial purity. The motherlove has watched at the gates of his childish Eden with a drawn sword. No evil counsel or influence has been allowed to come near him. And when in the necessary course of things he has passed out of her keeping, he goes accompanied by the Christ-prayer: I pray not that thou shouldst take them out of the world, but that thou shouldst keep them from the evil. This I call the moral initiative. The man's start in life, the nucleus of all that he is to believe, to aim at, and to do has been delivered to him like a sealed packet full of precious things by a mother who honors supremely all that honors humanity, who dreads and despises all that dishonors and deforms it. No one will deny that this type of woman is most precious. The question will rather be how we may maintain and multiply it. And here
