Excerpt from The Lights of the North: Illustrating the Rise and Progress of Christianity, in North-Eastern Scotland Ever since I wrote the life of Dr. Kidd it has been my cherished desire, by an appeal to the records of the past, to show to the people of this part of Scotland, where I have spent almost the whole of my public life, how much they owe to that Evangel, which has been here for more than a thousand years, and still lies at the heart of the ministrations of all true churches of Christ. The hours of leisure which the cares of my pastorate allowed I have spent in trying to master this large subject in its successive historical enshrinements and various denominational phases, that the central and vital element in our common Christianity may be seen, especially by the young, to be to-day what it has ever been - the rock and bulwark of ail that is most precious in our life.
