

The Nazis Go Underground

As early as 1943, senior Nazi officials were making preparations for Germany's defeat. Disillusioned by military setbacks and Hitler's increasingly unhinged leadership, chief architects Bormann and Himmler headed a top secret program to lay the foundations for the Nazi party's descent into the underground. The war, it seemed, was a lost cause; survival as a political entity, to fight another day, was now all that mattered. A system was concocted whereby a legitimate government would be infiltrated with dependable undercover Nazis, who would coordinate operations and policies in the party's favor. From this position, it was decided that Nazis could recover their strength and prepare for another conflict the Third World War
