

Tours in Wales, Vol. 3 (Classic Reprint)

Excerpt from Tours in Wales, Vol. 3 In Mr. Rowland's time, the foundation of the Llys or palace was to be seen a little to the south of the church, which is supposed to have been the domestic chapel. In its neighborhood, at Frondeg, is a stone which I overlooked. I find it mentioned in the manuscripts of Mr. Rowland; who has given the following inscription: Cur . . . Filius Cuuricini Eredit Hunc Lapidem. The author of the History of Anglesey also mentions it, but varies in the name of the founder, and his father. His reading is thus: Filius Ulrici Eredit Hunc Lapidem. I am credibly informed that the inscription is at present illegible; but the style of the memorial induces me to give it to a Dane: such are extremely frequent in Scandinavia Sto-Dingus fecit erigi lapidem in memoriam Arnonis filii sui qui profectus est in Hardalam - Thorstatum & Gura fecerunt erigi saxum in memoriam Lafsonis patris sui - and the imperfect one, like this of Ulric, Saxo lapidem hunc posuit, are proofs of the custom in the Baltic kingdom.
